Richard Mojica was quoted on the impact of President-elect Biden's trade agenda on current Trump administration policies, including the current tariffs on China. "At least with respect to the Chinese Section 301 tariffs under a Biden administration, his advisers and trade policy experts are not predicting any immediate changes in the short term," Mojica said. "There are a lot of different things at play and the experts think that Biden wants to keep options open until he has a chance to talk to allies and make a unified approach to China."
